IN THE WORLD OF THE RADIO

COMMUNICATIONS BY RADIO HELD RELIABLE

Although the transatlantic radio service of the Radio Corporation of America has been in existence only two years, it has already reached the stage where it handles approximately one-fifth of the total traffic passing between America and Europe, and an even greater proportion of the trans-Pacific traffic. This is accomplished by six high-power stations.

An installation for direct communication with Poland is being constructed, and plans are being made for direct service with Sweden, various parts of South America, Australia, China, and the Philippine Islands. The outlook for future rapid expansion is very bright.

The phenomenal growth of transoceanic radio communication is due to three major causes, first, the reliability of the service, second, the constant effort to increase the speed of communication, and, third, the great economy compared with the cost of cable communication.

The service of the corporation to transoceanic points was not once interrupted during the entire two years. This is chiefly due to the remarkable improvements which have been recently made in reducing the disturbing effect of "static" or atmospheric effects, formerly a cause for frequent shutdowns for hours and sometimes several days' duration during summer months, but now reduced to such an extent that the average daily interruption to service from this cause during the months of June to October of last year was one-half hour. Another cause for the good showing is the very fortunate fact that radio communication, unlike the cables, is not affected by magnetic storms or by the Aurora Borealis.

Automatic recording devices for reception have also increased the reliability of service. These are used for high speed reception, and also during ordinary oral reception by operators the recorders are left in circuit as a check. As a result of this, errors are becoming less frequent. A Chicago business man recently volunteered the information that out of a total of fifteen thousand code words received by him through a period of six weeks, the original copies and the confirmation copies mailed him from the receiving station were practically identical, showing very few errors in transmission.

In the transmitting stations, improvements have been made tending to make the sending machinery as automatic and dependable as ordinary power plant dynamos, which, in effect, they are. Only on noting the towers and antennas overhead does the visitor appreciate that he is in a radio station, and even there modern practice in long distance transmission lines has been followed. In fact, in one detail, the electrical sleet melting system used in radio is being considered for ordinary power line adoption.

Speed of radio communication means not only the actual rate of transmission of characters, but also the ability to keep up with a peak load and prevent piling up of messages. As to the first, the present maximum speed of sending and receiving by radio is about three hundred letters per minute, which is in excess of the transoceanic cable speed and about twice the average cable speed. But whereas cable speeds are distinctly limited by the electrical characteristics of the cable, radio speed is determined by details of relays and recorders only, and there is no doubt but that these can be designed to work at any rate that future traffic may call for. In the second place, radio communication is in a peculiarly fit position to take care of peak traffic, particularly when the times of the peaks for different countries occurs—as it does—at different periods of the day. During the peak period for one country, it is always possible to withdraw the services of other transmitters from other circuits operating at normal load, and thus handle in multiple the heavy traffic on the one circuit, thus rapidly taking care of the overload instead of letting it pile up. This is not possible with cable and wire lines.

The appreciation by the public of the reduced rates of radio communication with Europe and the Orient, coupled with the proven reliability of the service, is reflected in the rapid growth of the traffic being offered to the Radio corporation. Four public offices are now maintained in New York City, the collection and delivery of Radiograms now requiring a force of one hundred uniformed messengers. A new office has just been opened in Washington, D. C., and other offices are located in San Francisco and Honolulu.

DETECTOR CAN BE MADE FROM ODDS AND ENDS

The beginner usually chooses the detector as the first instrument to make for his outfit. This is logical, for the detector is really the most important instrument. On the other hand, it is the most simple instrument.

Crystal detectors are usually designed with one object in view, convenience of adjustment. The adjustment should be as universal as possible so that all parts of the crystal surface may be reached quickly.

The little detector about to be described will be found suitable in many ways. Its parts are simple and easily procured and the tools necessary for its construction are available in every household.

A small brass ball will be needed for the adjustable wire holder.

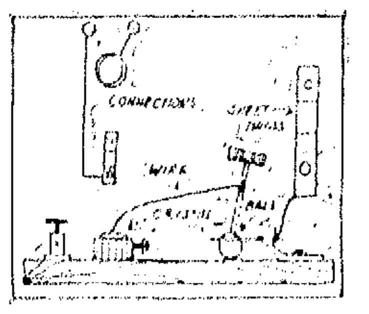

Diagram showing construction of a Crystal Detector.

A hole is drilled in this to accommodate a brass rod which may measure about an eighth of an inch in diameter. The sheet brass strip that holds the adjusting arm should have a hole drilled in it a trifle smaller than the diameter of the brass ball.

This done, the brass rod is soldered into the hole in the ball. Before the strip is screwed to the wooden base a handle is affixed to the top of the brass rod, as illustrated. A fine piece of phosphor bronze or brass wire is then soldered to the rod.

The cup for the crystal can be purchased in a radio shop, or one of the makeshifts described on this page may be used. Connections are made from the brass strip to one binding post and from the detector cap to the other binding post.

It is well to cut grooves in the base of the instrument so that the connections can be made underneath.

EDISON EFFECT—Edison found that he heated space about a wire insides an electric light was a one-way conductor of electricity. This is called the Edison effect, and the operation of the vacuum tube is based on this principle.

ELECTRON—The ultimate particle. Scientists believe the electron to be a unit of negative eletricity. Eletrons are shot off by hot filaments in vacuum tubes, and it is these tiny particles that give the vacuum tube its properties of one-way conductor.

Increases the action of the intestines

Hundreds of men and women have already found freedom from laxatives by eating Fleischmann's fresh yeast.

Doctors are now agreed that proper elimination of waste matter should be brought about by food. One doctor comes right out and states plainly that the indiscriminate use of cathartics is one of the causes of constipation.

Physicians all over the country are recommending Fleischmann's fresh yeast because it is a fresh food, rich in those elements which keep the intestines healthy. In one series of tested cases, normal functions were restored in from 3 days to 5 weeks.

Try it out for yourself. Begin today by adding 2 or 3 cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast to your everyday diet. Keep it up and see how normally and regularly your intestines act. Be sure it's Fleischmann's Yeast—the familar tin-foil package with the yellow label. Place a standing order with your grocer.

RADIO POSSIBILITIES IN REALMS OF EDUCATION

The wonderful possibilities of radio in the realms of education were pointed out by Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of directors of the Radio Corporation of America, in a statement made just before he sailed for France to attend a radio conference at Cannes.

"Every little red school-house in the country has potential possibilities for becoming a college," Mr. Young said.

"What is to prevent boys and girls from receiving courses of lectures via radio on various subjects so that they might take examinations and receive diplomas for good work? Mathematics, science, literature, history, art—all could be taught by authorities. Another case of bringing the mountain to Mahomet, if it happens that the prophet doesn't find it convenient or profitable to go to the mountain.

"Of course it is perfectly natural that the broadcasting of messages which have to do with entertainment, etc., should at present be the popular phase of this fascinating study but the matter of international communication is of tremendous importance and it is this question which will occupy our attention at Cannes. A station is now being built in Poland and another is contemplated in China. That will complete the girdle around the globe. Have you noticed how youngsters accept all these radio discoveries with perfect squanimity? It is funny but natural. They take it for granted. It is their day.

"It seems more marvelous to us 'oldsters' because we can make comparisons. We can figure back to the non-automobile, non-aeroplane non-wireless days—and the strides made in electrical science are colossal."

ADVENTURES THAT MADE AN AMERICAN

Hunting Eye In Court

BY R. S. ALEXANDER.

Hunting Eye was in jail for stealing a horse. He had not known that it was wrong, but the Sheriff had said that "ignorance of the law excuses nobody," and shut him up in jail.

One morning the Sheriff took him into court. The farmer, whose horse he had taken, was there. The Judge, a stern man with a gruff voice, looked at the Indian boy.

"Stand up," said he. "Did you know you were breaking the law by taking that horse?"

"No, sir," answered Hunting Eye.

"Do you know what a thief is?"

"No, sir."

"Well, you are one. When people, by working or saving, are able to buy horses, houses and land, those things become theirs. They are private property and the persons who bought them are the owners. The law forbids one person to take private property owned by another. If he does so he is a thief and his act is stealing. The law will punish him for it.

"If this man here," and he pointed to the farmer, "brings charges against you we will try you. We will bring in twelve men living in the county. They are called the jury. The farmer and the Sheriff and you, yourself, if you wish, will tell them all the facts of the case. I will tell them what the law is and they will decide whether you have broken it. If they say you have, we will shut you up in prison to punish you and teach you not to steal again. If you promise to obey the law and not steal again, we might turn you loose."

"I'll promise," said Hunting Eye.

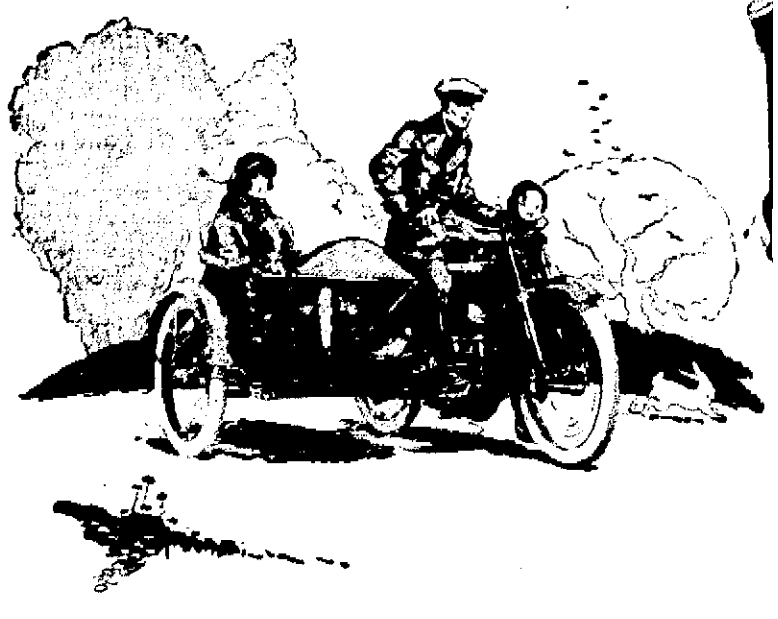
"Do you want to prefer charges?" the Judge asked the farmer.

"No, sir, as the boy didn't know what he was doing, I don't."

"Dismissed," ordered the judge, and the little Indian boy was again free to go out into the sunshine and open air.

QUESTIONS

1. How is the Judge chosen?
2. How is the Jury chosen?
3. Could the farmer have been on the jury to try Hunting Eye?
4. Why could Hunting Eye not have been compelled to testify?
5. How many kinds of courts are there in your county and what are their duties?



Have you ever sat astride living power and had it carry you off, like a winged Mercury, over road and lane, up hill and down at any gait you chose?

Picture such a ride, early some spring morning when the roads are clear and the mist is still drifting over the clean country landscape with the sun coming up over the hills far ahead. With your motor singing a soft, cozy hum, you thoroughly enjoy the scenery and breathe the pure, invigorating country air.

Such a jaunt is made particularly enjoyable when you're mounted on a Harley-Davidson, "World's Champion Motorcycle."

RIPPER MURDER IN NEW YORK

Woman Found Slashed to Death in Hallway.

BODY DRAGGED INTO PLACE FROM STREET

Man with Clothing Covered with Blood Is Arrested—No Trace of Knife.

New York, April 11.—Slashed to death by a "Jack the Ripper," the body of a woman later identified as Miss Helen Tracy, forty years old, was found lying face downward in the ground floor hallway of the big double deck tenement house at No. 17 Catherine street, early today.

A crimson trail leading out into the street showed that the body had been dragged into the house from the outside.

The woman's clothing, consisting of a cheap checked gingham dress, a black underskirt and a pair of black shoes, lay piled on the floor a few feet from the body.

The victim's body was found by lodgers who stumbled over it when they started out to a bakery to get their breakfast rolls. Detectives were summoned immediately and members of the thirty-two families occupying the building were questioned but none could recall ever having seen the murdered woman.

Women from adjoining houses were equally unable to throw any light on the mystery. A house to house canvass of the neighborhood was then made. Finally Frank McGowan, twenty years old, identified the body and explained that Miss Tracy had lived with his grandmother for almost ten years. He was unable, however, to furnish any information as to her associates, or to throw any light on the death mystery.

Man Is Arrested.

Other residents at No. 16 1-2 Hamilton street, the McGowan domicile, could add nothing further to the youth's story. Then a policeman remembered that two hours before the body had been discovered, a man, apparently in a mental haze, had been arrested while shuffling along east Broadway a few blocks from where the woman's body was found.

The man's hands and coat sleeves were covered with blood when he was arrested. He had given his name as Michael Marxderoter, thirty-seven. He was taken to the scene of the murder and police said that a more serious charge might be preferred against him later in the day.

Physicians who examined the body said that they found a deep, eight-inch gash cut into the lower part of the torso, besides many minor cuts and bruises.

The police theory is that the murder took place in a room in the vicinity and that the body was carried by the slayer through the deserted streets to the Catherine street building where it was discovered. No trace of the death knife has been found.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF HART SENT OUT BY SHERIFF

Sheriff and Police Run Down Every Possible Clue.

Sheriff Frank A. Washburn and his deputies with the assistance of the police department are running down every possible clew in an effort to get a trace of Fred Hart, alias Hartsel and Wilson, who escaped from the county jail early Monday morning. The authorities feel confident they will be able to apprehend Hart.

Photographs with a full description of the escaped prisoner were sent out at noon Monday and these are in the hands of departments of nearly all the large cities and towns of Ohio and surrounding states. It is the belief that Hart has been taken to a nearby place and because of his weakened condition he was assisted from the jail and taken away in some kind of vehicle.

Several clews are being run down which may not only lead to the recapture of Hart, but also result in the arrest of the party or parties who are believed by officials to have assisted him in gaining his liberty.

JAIL THIEVES DEMANDS SOLON

Woodruff Would Imprison All War Grafters.

STEALINGS OF ARMY CONTRACTORS HUGE

Urges Committee To Probe Contracts Made with Ford Company and Other Firms.

Washington, April 11.— Representative Woodruff today declared before the committee investigating war contracts, that the committee should be empowered to investigate settlements of any contracts by any governmental officer and to prove criminal and civil prosecution, or lack of prosecution growing out of the contracts.

Woodruff would have the investigating body inquire into the contracts made by the Bosch Magneto company, the American Electro-Products company, the Standard Aircraft corporation, the Standard Aero company, the Chemical Foundation company, and the Lincoln Motor company, now controlled by Henry Ford.

"I have laid sufficient facts before congress today to startle the nation. I believe further, if there is an unwillingness on the part of the department of justice to function in the manner in which it should function that public sentiment should and will compel a change. It is incomprehensible that the president should be aware of these facts. I do not believe President Wilson was aware of the conditions that existed during his administration. I do not believe that President Harding is aware of the conditions as they exist today."

Amount to Millions.

Woodruff declared that information he had obtained disclosed that in contracts made for the air service in almost every instance "overpayments running into the millions in individual cases had been made by the government."

"In addition to the over-payments, it was found in nearly every instance that the contractors had been guilty of acts which clearly called for action by the department of justice," Woodruff continued.

"Notwithstanding the fact that much of this information has been in the hands of the department of justice for months, no determined action looking either to recovery of the money due the government or to the criminal prosecution of the officers has been taken."

HUGHES AGAINST CUT BELOW TREATY LIMIT

Tells Solon Further Slash Is Perilous.

Washington, April 11.—To maintain the United States navy at a strength below that authorized by the naval limitation treaty of the Washington conference would be "injurious to the interests of the country," Secretary of State Hughes declared today in a letter to Congressman Rogers, Republican, of Massachusetts.

Rogers has asked the secretary of state to give his opinion of the adequacy of the personnel of 67,000 contemplated by the naval appropriation bill just reported to the house.

Calls Prohibition a Fraud.

Southampton, April 11.—"A wonderful, wonderful people," was Mrs. Margot Asquith's description of America as she disembarked returning from a lecture tour of the United States. Prohibition, she asserted, was the only fraud she found. She declared the prohibition law worked most unfairly between the rich and poor.

Appointments Confirmed.

Washington, April 11.—The senate this afternoon confirmed the nominations of J. E. Elliott, of Texas; G. Wallace W. Ranger, of Washington, and A. C. Wharton, of Missouri, to be members of the railroad labor board.

WOULD HAVE CONCERN DECLARED BANKRUPT

Another Petition Entered Against Company.

Columbus, April 11.—Although a similar petition recently was dismissed, another petition asking that the Pittsburgh Tinplate and Steel corporation be declared bankrupt, has been filed in the federal court here by Edward A. Kraus, Jr., the United Steel and Supply company, F. A. Eudgn, Jr., and Jennie B. Taylor, who claim they hold unsecured claims aggregating $53,615.06 against the corporation.

The petition dismissed was drawn up under another section of the federal bankruptcy act.

Jennie B. Taylor claims $47,551.94 is due her for money loaned and notes held by her. She is the wife of Lakin C. Taylor, former president of the corporation, who was sentenced recently to a prison term for illegally selling stock.

No Arrests Made.

Charleston, W. Va., April 11.—No arrests have been made up to a late hour this afternoon by state police investigating the finding this morning of three sticks of dynamite on the window sill of the home of a non-union employe of the American Rolling mills property at Costa, on the Kanawha-Boone county line. The fuse had burned down to the cap, but the dynamite failed to explode.

Ask Rate Rehearing.

Columbus, April 11.—The steam railroads operating in Ohio today jointly applied to the state utilities commission for a re-hearing relative to the commission's order issued April 7, last, for a 28½ per cent. reduction in freight rates on interstate shipments of agricultural limestone.

SAYS WALL STREET STRANGLES RAILROAD

Attorney Declares System Is in Grasp.

Philadelphia, April 11.—"The financial interests in this country have got us by the throat," James P. Kohler, Brooklyn attorney, declared today at the annual stockholders' meeting of the Pennsylvania Railroad company.

"They have refused to finance ordinary businessmen and it is this that has closed the factories along the Pennsylvania railroad and demoralized our business. Steer clear of the financial interests. Remember our company has had to pay seven and one-half and six and one-half per cent. for money, thereby reducing our dividends. We must appeal to the government to stop this."

CONVICTION OF NEGRO REVERSED BY COURT

Executioner of Murder Farm Is Given New Trial.

Atlanta, Ga., April 11.—The conviction of Clyde Manning, confessed negro "executioner" in the John S. Williams plantation in Newton and Jasper counties, Georgia, was reversed today by the Georgia supreme court and a new trial ordered.

Manning was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment, following the conviction of John S. Williams, who was charged with having ordered the slaying of many negro farm hands. Williams, having been denied a new trial, now is serving a life sentence.

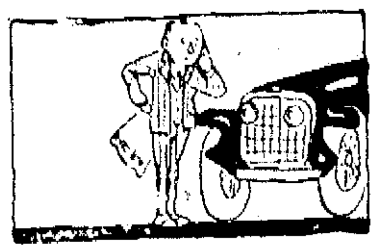
Restoring The Battery To Service

Start The Season With A Well-Conditioned Battery

BEFORE replacing the battery in a car, which is to be again put into service, be sure that it is fully charged and otherwise in good condition. If it has been under the care of a battery service station, its condition may be assumed to be O. K. and if it has been looked after by the owner, it should be charged unless each cell shows 1250 gravity, wiped clean and the connection posts scraped bright to insure perfect contacts. Take care that, when replaced, it sets exactly as it did before removal and that the connecting cables are attached to the same posts as previously, for otherwise the ammeter will read charge when a discharge is occurring and vice versa. The hold-downs, which secure it in position, should be securely set up and quite likely will require a retightening after the car has been used a short time. Perfect cleanness of the contact surfaces of the cable clamps is essential and they should be well tightened. After attaching one of them (with the lighting, ignition and other switches all "off") touch the other cable clamp to its post and very carefully watch for a spark. If even a very slight one is observed, a leak in the system is indicated and should be removed before permanently connecting the other cable. The connections should be well covered with vaseline to retard corrosion.

AUXILIARY AIR DEVICES



J. C. T. asks: If I install an auxiliary air device, such as the ——, in the intake manifold of my engine, will it enable me to obtain better fuel economy and flexibility?

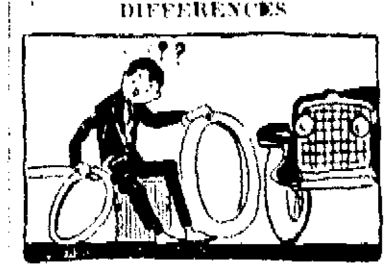
Answer: Possibly, but our experience has been that these devices are of very little value on cars that have first class carburetors kept in the best possible adjustment, and that it is possible to obtain as good fuel economy by adjusting the carburetor closely, as the auxiliary air device can bring about. These auxiliary air attachments work wonders as to gasoline saving when applied to engines that are running on excessively over-rich mixtures, but not much can be expected from them when attached to engines the carburation of which is uniformly as lean as practicable.

CLEANING CARBONIZED VALVES

W. B. T. asks: Is the following an advisable treatment for removing carbon from engine valves: To feed a quart of kerosene into the carburetor air-intake, while the engine is running, and then follow it up with a pint of water, introduced in the same way?

Answer: The use of kerosene in this manner does some good in softening and removing burned oil and soot that is deposited on valve faces, seats and stems, but it is doubtful if one treatment has much effect on hardened deposits. Possibly the water also would have a good effect, but you are proposing to use quite a large amount of it and a large amount of kerosene. It seems to us. It will be best to apply your suggested treatment, when the engine is hot and just before you are to replace the crankcase oil, so that the kerosene and water that runs down past the pistons, will be gotten rid of when you drain the lubricating system.

EFFECT OF TIRE DIAMETER DIFFERENCES



E. C. L. writes: Different makes of cord tires, of the same nominal size, vary in actual diameter. How much such variation can safely be allowed without undue wear of the differential? How much can be permitted in the case of front tires, without affecting the steering?

Answer: The work imposed upon the differential, from this cause, would in our opinion, be negligible in comparison with that due to turning corners and driving over curving country roads. It would be hardly more than that due to running a hard pumped tire on one side and a soft one on the other. If a car always ran in an absolutely straight line, it might be more worthy of consideration. We do not believe that this difference in mould diameters would ever be noticed in the steering.

Questions of general interest to the motorist will be answered by Mr. Clough in this column, space permitting. If an immediate answer is desired, enclose self-addressed, stamped envelope.

LORAIN MAYOR IS ASSAILED

Civil Service Commissioner Seeks Injunction.

WOULD PREVENT HIS REMOVAL FROM OFFICE

Says Mayor Shows Sympathy for Bootlegging Enterprises and Other Violations.

Columbus, April 11.—Claiming that Mayor F. Grall, Lorain, had filed "pretended charges" of inefficiency, neglect of duty and malfeasance in office, M. F. Peer, member of the Lorain civil service commission, today asked the state supreme court to issue a writ of prohibition preventing the mayor from ousting Commissioner Peer from office.

Peer's term does not expire until January 1, 1926.

The court issued an alternative writ temporarily enjoining the mayor from proceeding any farther in the matter, pending a hearing by the supreme court. Mayor Grall was given until May 13 to file his answer.

Mayor Grall had notified Commissioner Peer on April 4, that a hearing on the charges preferred by the mayor would be held in the mayor's office at Lorain on April 19.

The mayor had accused Commissioner Peer, among other things, of joining others in applauding remarks alleged to have been made, at a meeting of the Lorain Democratic club in the American legion hall on March 8, by Anthony May, who, the mayor alleged, called him "bad names" and accused the mayor of unfitness for office. Commissioner Peer, also, was accused by Mayor Grall of indicating sympathy for "bootlegging enterprises" and other forms of dry law violations.

BOND NOT IN FORCE, ATTORNEYS CLAIM

Failure of Grand Jury To Indict Reason Given.

Defiance, April 11. — That the bond of $25,000, under which A. J. Gleichauf, of Newark, was held to the grand jury after he pleaded not guilty to a charge of driving while intoxicated when arraigned two weeks ago following an automobile accident in which Harry Martin, of Rochester, Indiana, received fatal injuries, was automatically cancelled when the grand jury failed to indict Gleichauf, was the claim made today by John W. Winn and T. T. Shaw, attorneys for Gleichauf's bondsmen.

The attorneys base this contention on the terms of the bond and declare that Gleichauf is no longer subject to court. The bondsmen are R. C. Albertus, Charles Harris and C. W. C. Behne, Defiance businessmen.

Judge Fred L. Hay, who declared he had not discharged the bond, would make no statement regarding the contention pending the decision of the prosecuting attorney as to whether or not he would submit the case to another grand jury.

GREAT CONVENTION HALL IS PLANNED

Cincinnati Aims To Erect Five Million Dollar Edifice.

Cincinnati, April 11.—Plans for a $5,000,000 convention hall, to take the place of Music hall, one of the most famous buildings in the middle west, were under discussion today following announcement that the fall festival, which was to have been held there, must be called off unless $200,000 in improvements are made on the place. As the festival has been advertised to start in the middle of August, it is believed it will be impossible for the improvements to be made and that it will be necessary to call off the entire exhibition, with a loss to business men of Cincinnati of $1,500,000.

SPORTING NOTES

Five Day Tournament.

Chicago, April 11.—Five days instead of three will be required to complete the national open golf championship tournament at the Skokie club next July, it was announced today. At a conference here of golf officials, it was decided that the three qualifying rounds will be of thirty-six holes with a final of seventy-two holes. In increasing the length of the tournament, two days, officials believe good golf will result.

Series of Races Planned.

New York, April 11.—Charley Paddock and Loren Murchison are to meet in a series of races ranging in distance from fifty yards to the furlong.

The proposition is being pushed by members of the Illinois Athletic club, Murchison's home club, and the challenge, it is said, has found Paddock in a receptive attitude. A neutral track would be the scene of this spiked shoe novelty, a backwash of a rivalry that dates back to the final heat of the 100 metre dash at the Olympic games.

CHIEF FIGURE IN NEWEST LOVE SUIT

Wilhelmina Meyer.

Miss Wilhelmina Meyer, who had her marriage to V. J. Mayo annulled because he had a wife, has brought suit for $101,000 against the present —and third—Mrs. Mayo, in whose name the Mayo estate is entered. After the second Mrs. Mayo had divorced her husband Miss Meyer attempted to get him to remarry her. When he refused she sued for breach of promise and was awarded $101,000. Now she's trying to collect it through a second suit.

DISPLAY MEN TAKE IN TWENTY-TWO MEMBERS

F. A. Stengel, of Centennial Committee, Talks.

Twenty-two new members were taken in at the meeting of the Marion Display Men's association at the Templeton Coffee Shoppe, on west Church street last night. F. A. Stengel, chairman of the historical committee of the centennial, Guy H. Hulse, secretary of the Retail Merchants' bureau, and George Kleinmaier spoke at the meeting. Twenty-five membrs were present at the meeting. The membership of the club was increased to thirty-five by the addition of the new members.

In his address, Mr. Stengel urged cooperation of the various stores in the city in the use of ther store windows for centennial displays, thereby promoting uniformity. Mr. Stengel was made a member of the association.

"Show windows are the medium by which the public gauge merchants," said Mr. Hulse, in telling of the functions and value of the association. Mr. Hulse said that according to present plans of the association, each member will be allowed to arrange a display at one of the meetings. It is also planned, he said, to have out-of-town experts at some of the meetings. Some of the meetings will be held in the stores.

The importance of the news or suggestive value of window displays was emphasized in an address by George Kleinmaier on "Window Display from a Customers' Standpoint."

The association adopted the slogan "Marion Displays Better." George W. Griffith, Charles H. King and C. L. Anderson, were named on the membership committee. George Edgecomb, Leo Pence and Charles H. King were named on a committee to cooperate with the centennial historical committee in securing a uniform display card for relics.

SEMENOFF IS TERMED BRUTE

Russian General a Wholesale Murderer, Is Charge.

AMERICAN OFFICER TALKS OF ATROCITIES

Thousands of Prisoners Brought to "Slaughter Yards" and Murdered.

Frankfort, Ky., April 11.—Reports and records kept by him while commander of the Twenty-Seventh United States infantry in Verkhne-Udinsk, Siberia, showing troubles American forces had with General Grogorie Semenoff, Ataman of the Siberia cossacks, and of atrocities committed by Semenoff Commanders were taken to Washington by Lieutenant Colonel Charles H. Morrow, who was summoned to appear Wednesday before the senate committee on immigration and labor. When General Semenoff was arrested in New York last week, Colonel Morrow sent a telegram to Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes, in which he declared that Semenoff was "the cowardly and unscrupulous enemy of America" conducting through the press a "propaganda of base slander and falsehood;" that his troops treacherously had murdered American soldiers; that he was known to [illegible] in Siberia as a murderer and robber and that his crimes were unspeakable and that he is "the greatest monster of modern times."

Tells of "Slaughter Yards."

Colonel Morrow telling of Semenoff's operations in Siberia, asserted that the Cossack general had maintained four "slaughter yards" in Siberia. He declared that "it was a poor day" when Semenoff's men did not slay at least 200 persons at these four places.

Colonel Morrow carried with him a report made by First Lieutenant C. J. McNutt, a member of the Siberian railway force, telling of the murder of at least 1,500 prisoners at Adrianovka, one of the "slaughter yards." The other killing places were at Borgia, Olivannya and Diauria, he said.

Lieutenant McNutt's report states that August 19, 1919, a train of forty-one cars containing prisoners —each car contains from thirty to thirty-five men—arrived at Adrianovka from the west.

"We knew there was to be a big killing," says the report, "as on the day previous there had been forty or forty-five prisoners, digging four large holes out in the slaughter yard."

At 9:20 in the morning, the yard engine took twenty-nine cars to the yard. The cars were covered with soldiers and a machine gun was at each end. Lieutenant McDonald and myself started out to the yards following the railway line.

Bribe Guard To Pass.

The lieutenant then tells how they bribed a guard to let them by, but were stopped by another guard after they had got in sight of where the train was unloaded. He tells how the cars were unloaded two a time, and the prisoners were started "over toward the holes," which were 300 yards from the railroad track.

"Twenty-nine empties were brought back to Adrianovka," says the report, "at 11:55 o'clock, and at 1:15 the other twenty-three cars were taken."

Rev. G. L. Pake, north of Marion, left this afternoon for Columbus where he will engage in city mission work. He will remain there throughout the week.

When "No" Is Good Sometimes Isn't It Better At All Times?

A great many people have learned to say "No" to tea or coffee at noon and at night—learned it at the cost of jumping nerves and disturbed digestion.

Thousands of others who passed through that stage have learned to say "No" to tea and coffee all the time, and have found a most satisfactory "Yes" in Postum.

Postum's full, rich flavor delights the taste and meets all the demands for a hot, mealtime drink, and it contains no element that can harm anybody. Even little children may share in the delights of a hot cup of Postum with any meal.

Whether or not the thein in tea or the caffeine in coffee has begun to serve warnings on you, you can profit by the experience of others and by the information which any doctor can give you—and find charm without harm in Postum.

Suppose you make the test for ten days, with well-made Postum, and compare the "feel" with your former experience with tea and coffee.

Your grocer sells both forms of Postum: Instant Postum (in tins) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes.

CITY TO MANDAMUS MARION COUNTY BANK

To Compel Company To Keep Within Its Property Line.

CITY SOLICITOR TO FILE PETITION

Court Also Will Be Asked To Rule on Matter of Removing Outside Stairway.

All efforts to effect a settlement in the controversy between the city council and the Marion County Bank company relative to the latter company giving over its property line in the remodeling of the bank building seem to have failed. As a result, City Solicitor George T. Geran will prepare a petition for a mandatory injunction to compel the bank to keep within its property line and file the same in the court this week.

According to the survey the bank front stood out fourteen inches on the city's property, while the plans for remodeling would bring the front out about eight inches more. As a result the council took action in the matter and turned it over to the direcor of public service, who was authorized to have the work stopped. He carried out his instructions four weeks ago and since then nothing has been done and an effort was made to reach some agreement.

The bank company has endeavored to prove that the front will not work an inconvenience on pedestrians because of the round corner and that it will remove the outside stairway and also take in at least one of the side steps from the walk, which would better the conditions. While this plan meets with the approval of some, others among the councilmen have declared their intentions to stand pat on the matter. The mandatory injunction will also cover the removal of the outside sidewalk stairway and the steps and the matter will be left for the court to settle.

NATIONS MAY FORM NEW BODY

the ground that Roumania had seized Bessarabia, which is controversial territory. The protest was rejected.

[Bessarabia was formerly a Russian province but after the war was over-run by Roumania troops.]

Still another protest was lodged by the Russians when they asked that the Japanese delegates be expelled from the meeting on the ground that they were making war against the Russians.

"Japan intends to remain in this conference whether Tchitcherin likes it or not," said Dr. Ispi, of the Japanese delegation.

The representatives of the "little entente" on the sub-committee are Polish and Roumanian delegates. The neutrals are Swedish and Swiss delegates.

As friction developed among the delegations both Premier Lloyd George and M. Benes, of the Czecho-Slovakian delegation, assumed the roles of pacificators. Lloyd George mediated between the Russians and the Roumanians and Japan, while Benes mediated between the Russians and the French.

It is understood that the premier has drawn up a definite set of proposals on Russia which he will propound tomorrow.

Passes Committee Stage.

Genoa, April 11.—The international economic conference passed into the committee stage today. Optimism over the results of the meeting had been reduced somewhat by the refusal of the French to discuss limitation of land armaments.

The French at Genoa are maintaining the same policy on land disarmament that they held at the Washington conference.

Technically the French are justified in their position because limitation of armies was not included in the Genoa program drawn up during the last supreme council meeting at Cannes. It is known, however, that Premier Lloyd George of England, came here filled with hope that some sort of disarmament agreement could be reached so that the disbursements of European government could be cut down and taxes reduced.

The European nations having the largest armies are Russia, France and Poland.

The suggestion that the conference take up limitation of armies came from George Tchitcherin, commissar for foreign affairs in the Moscow soviet government, immediately after the conference got under way.

It was reported late this afternoon that Tchitcherin and Barthou had another clash in the committee meeting and that both had threatened to withdraw.

It was understood, however, that both were finally soothed and the matter was smoothed out. Neither the French nor Russian delegate would discuss the matter.

Refusal Vindicated.

Washington, April 11.—The refusal of the United States to participate in the Genoa economic conference has already been partially vindicated by the manner in which the parley has started off—petty quarreling on the part of France and soviet Russia and near quarrels with other delegations—it was asserted today in official administration circles.

If the conference could not get by the first "hand-shaking" session without animosities coming to the surface, it bodes ill for the future success of the meeting, one official said, and the United States should congratulate itself for staying out.

Everything that has transpired in the sessions to date—France's stiff-necked refusal to discuss reduction of land armaments and the cropping out of poorly concealed animosities on the part of other delegations—all go to prove, it was said, the accuracy of Secretary Hughes' description of the conference as "political rather than economic."

Russians Guarded.

Genoa, April 11.—The Russian is the most carefully guarded delegation at the Genoa conference. Secret police, gendarmes and troops patrol the vicinity of the Imperial hotel to prevent any attack upon the Russians by the Fascisti, an Italian anti-Socialist organization.

Washington Hopeful.

Washington, April 11.—Although declining to participate in the Genoa economic conference because of its political rather than economic character, the administration is most "hopeful" that every success will attend the efforts of the statesmen at Genoa to erect a program of European reconstruction. It was officially stated at White House this afternoon.

TARIFF BILL IS REPORTED

trolling the senate finance committee, the bill is minus the Fordney valuations plans, foreign valuations having been substituted in its stead. The American valuations system has its champions among Republican senators, as well as among house Republicans, and a stiff fight against foreign valuations will probably be waged in the senate before the bill is finally sent to conference and Chairman Fordney and his house colleagues come to grips with their senatorial opponents about it.

The administration is reported, however, to be already set against American valuations.

Bitter Fight Seen.

One of the bitterest battles between the Republicans and Democrats over the bill is expected to rage over the proposal to give the president blanket authority to do pretty much as he deems best in changing or fixing rates as trade conditions vary or foreign exchange fluctuates.

The Republicans concede that the president would be vested with unusual, unprecedented and almost limitless power to control American commercial and business conditions, but would be armed with an entirely new diplomatic weapon with which to deal with foreign nations.

The Democrats declare that such authority would not only be autocratic but would vest absolute control of the necessities of life in the executive, while depriving congress at the same time of its constitutional right to legislate in matters affecting the commerce, the industry, the production and the consumption of the country.

Under the bill, the president would first be given authority to increase any rate of duty fifty per cent. in excess of that provided by the measure whenever he found, upon investigation, presumably by the federal tariff commission, that the foreign product involved was underselling its domestic equivalent in the American market.

The president would also have authority to switch the foreign valuation of an imported article to its American wholesale selling price and then to increase or decrease by fifty per cent. the rates fixed by the bill, should he find that the foreign valuation tariff was not sufficient to "protect" American industry.

Drastic Powers.

Even more drastic would be the power given the president to not only take articles from the free list and place them on the dutiable list whenever he considered conditions justified his doing so, but to shut out altogether foreign products whenever he discovered they were being dumped on the American market.

Another feature of the bill which is new to tariff legislation and which is due to post war conditions at home and abroad, is the "protection" given to "infant industries" which, like that of chemicals and dyestuffs, sprang up in this country during the World war.

The chemical dye provision of the bill is in effect an embargo for one year against foreign chemicals and dyestuffs, particularly those of German manufacture.

It is the intention of Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, an antiadministration member of the senate finance committee, to move to strike this provision from the bill when it is taken up by the senate.

In this, he is expected to be aided and abetted by senators like King, Democrat, of Utah, and Moses, Republican, of New Hampshire, who contend that the present embargo is permitting the Duponts and other American dyestuffs interests to develop and maintain an absolute monopoly in this country.

Long staple cotton is another "infant industry" of the World war which is "protected" by the bill. The industry is given seven cents a pound, but its spokesmen asked for fifteen cents and are prepared to carry their fight to the senate floor.

One of the radical changes made in the bill as it passed the house was that taking hides off the free list, and placing of a duty of two cents on "green" and four cents on "dried" hides. All leather goods are also taken from the free list and placed in a general dutiable category of "sundries," a rate of twelve and six cents a pair being placed for instance on shoes.

The basic wool rate is fixed at thirty-three cents a pound on "clean content" or eight cents higher than in the house bill, and a level even more advantageous to the wool grower than was the famous schedule K of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

The removal of hides from the free list for the first time in many years and the establishment of a high specific duty on "scoured" wool, were among the provisions deleted by the agricultural tariff bloc, which also succeeded in forcing into the bill ample "protective" rates for all sorts and conditions of farm and livestock products from eggs and milk to wheat and meat.

The house provisions of two cents a pound full duty on sugar with 1.60 cents a pound on Cuban sugar was retained, despite efforts made to boost the rate to 2.40 full and 2.00 Cuban.

A REVOLT PALL OVER IRELAND

Despite the threats against his life, Collins is going about his affairs with philosophical calmness. When affairs of state give him leisure to do so, he accepts invitations to make political speeches in defense of the Anglo-Irish peace treaty.

Republicans have occupied the town of Athlone commandeering a number of buildings for military purposes. The situation at Athlone is described as menacing.

The suppression of Free State courts by the republicans continues. At Clonmel, republicans in an armored car with a mounted machine gun, drew up in front of the court-house and forbade the holding of quarter sessions court.

Troops May Stay.

London, April 11.—A report that Michael Collins, the leading member of the Irish provisional government at Dublin, had asked the British not to remove any more troops from Ireland, was printed today by the Daily Express.

Members of the colonial office refused to confirm or deny this report. They insisted that they knew nothing about it. It is regarded as significant that the Irish Free State government has not made any formal protest against the reappearance of British soldiers in Dublin where they are doing police duty.

Michael Collins issued formal denial of a report printed by the London Daily Express that he had asked the British government to maintain troops in Ireland.

Evacuation Continues.

London, April 11.—The evacuation of British troops from Ireland is continuing, despite the increased disorders and the threat of civil war between the Irish Free State troops and the mutinous faction of the Irish republican army.

Colonial Secretary Winston Churchill, speaking in the house of commons this afternoon, denied that the withdrawal of English military forces from Ireland had been suspended for any reason.

Troopers Investigate.

Charleston, W. Va., April 11.—Lieutenant Jack King and a detail of state troopers are today conducting an investigation in the vicinity of Mount Carbon, Fayette county, where last night a Chesapeake and Ohio eastbound passenger train from Cincinnati to Washington, was fired on from the mountainside. Two bullets crashed through one of the coaches just over the heads of Lieutenant King and two other passengers.

Mount Carbon is one of the points at which miners gathered last summer for the march on Mingo county. At the beginning of the disturbances, all lines of communication were cut there. So far there has been no trouble in that vicinity during the present strike.

SAYS AGOSTA SCHOOL WILL DEBATE IN FINAL

The Superintendent of Agosta School Makes Statement.

Announcement that a new schedule which will include Agosta in the final debate for the county high-school title is being prepared by the literary committee of the county schools was made today by H. O. Billett, superintendent of the Agosta school.

"In justice to the high school at Agosta a correction should be made in the schedule published in Monday's paper," Mr. Billett stated. "The schedule was made while the Agosta school was unjustly and, it is believed, illegally deprived of its charter. A new schedule is being prepared by the literary committee, giving Agosta the place in the final which it has earned. Agosta won unanimous decisions in both of the preliminary debates, defeating Prospect and LaRue."

GALION MUSIC CLUB MEMBERS ENTERTAIN

Exchange Program with Lecture-Recital Club

CLOSES SEASON FOR MARION ORGANIZATION

Three Galion Women Contribute to Excellent Program of Songs and Piano Numbers.

Three members of the Galion Music club gave a concert at the Central Junior High school auditorium last evening in that club's exchange program with the local Lecture-Recital club, members of which will go to Galion in the near future.

Those contributing to the excellent program of the evening were Mrs. Wesley Koppe, Mrs. Judd V. Dye and Mrs. Clarence Hughes. The reader, Mrs. Loren Beck, was unable to appear on the program.

Mrs. Koppe, who has a beautiful soprano voice, sang in a very charming manner the opening numbers of the program, giving to the delight of her audience "My Desire," Nevin; "The Cock Shall Crow," Carpenter, and "Dawn," Curran. She also sang the closing group of songs, giving "Slumber Sea," Salter; "There Are Fairies In Our Garden," Lehmann, and "Life," Curran.

Mrs. Koppe's songs were enthusiastically received, but as the party had to leave early to return to Galion, no encores were given to any of the numbers on the program.

Mrs. Dye also pleased with her songs, her splendid soprano voice, being strong and clear. Her first number was "Spring Is Awake," Gaines, and her group numbers were "To a Hilltop," "Afternoon," and "Aspiration," Cox. She was given hearty applause.

Group of Piano Numbers.

Mrs. Hughes, who is a highly accomplished pianist, played a group of Liszt numbers, "Liebestraum No. 2," "Valse Oubliee" and "Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 11." She played beautifully, was heartily applauded, and she also made a most pleasing accompanist for the vocal numbers.

Mrs. H. K. Modsor, the president, announced that the executive board will meet Saturday evening at the Y. M. C. A. parlor at 7 o'clock, and also that the chorus will hold a rehearsal this evening at the Central Junior High-school auditorium to practice the music for centennial week. She also announced that the state convention of Ohio Music clubs will be held at Granville May 16 to 18.

The program last evening closed the club's season.

MONTRAVILLE WOOD TO LECTURE TUESDAY

Will Appear at Central Junior High Auditorium.

Once again a Marion audience will get a chance to hear what was one of the most enjoyed of all the Chautauqua lectures in the past at the Central Junior High-school auditorium tomorrow night. Montraville Wood, the inventor and scientific lecturer, will give his talk on modern scientific discoveries. He is the inventor of many devices now in use, including the two-button electric switch. As a lecturer and demonstrator he is unique in his field.

One of the most important demonstrations is the gyroscope. Other devices which he will demonstrate are the ultra-violet ray, how to light an electric lamp with only one wire. Part of his talk will be an explanation of radio.

The lecture will be the last number of the course of the senior class of Harding High school.

Bretz—David Sylvester, son of Samuel and Katheryn Bretz, was born December 30, 1837, in Grand Prairie, Marion county, and departed this life at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. H. Bardon, Morral, Ohio, April 7, 1922.

On September 1, 1859, he was married to Miss Jane Ann Coon, and they were the parents of four children, Mrs. J. H. TenEyck, of Marion, Ohio; S. E. Bretz and Mrs. Charles Swartz, of Nevada, Ohio, and Mrs. J. H. Bardon, of Morral, Ohio. Mr. Bretz was a member of a family of nine children all of whom have preceded him.

Very early in his life he gave himself to God, and was a charter member of the Grand Prairie Free Baptist church, and has lived a consecrated Christian until that summons from his heavenly Father to join his beloved companion who preceded him in May, 1913, in their mansion above. This Grand Prairie Free Baptist church was organized on Washington's birthday in the year of 1867. Mr. Bretz served as its first clerk from 1867 to 1872. His last public words of exhortation and prayer and expression of gratefulness to his Maker for His manifold blessing through the walks of this life, were spoken at the church only one week before his departure.

His boyhood days were spent near the place of his birth, coming to Morral in the year of 1909, since that time he has resided with his children. For a number of years health has been poor, and the suffering in the body was almost too great to bear. "but we glory in the promises of Christ, with a perfect Faith, when He says, 'Neither shall there be any more pain.' Write it in letters of gold; write it upon the sun; and spell it with stars across the darkest night of sorrows, so that all may read it; write it in the unfading letters of faith upon the memory, O suffering child of God, with thorns in thy flesh that even faith and prayer can not remove."

RHEUMATISM—SWOLLEN KNEES

After taking a few bottles of Nerv-Worth my rheumatism had entirely disappeared. I could eat anything I wished without sour stomach, heartburn or gas belching and my nervousness was all gone." You can buy Nerv-Worth at one dollar a bottle at most any first class drug store and every druggist is authorized to give the money back if the first bottle is not satisfactory in results. It is always on sale in this city at the Schmidt & Co. drug store. Try a bottle today and see how quickly you will feel better.—Adv.

COUNCIL PROVIDES FOR IMPROVEMENT BONDS

Ordinance Calls for $41,281 To Pay City's Portion.

PROPERTY OWNERS' PART IS $98,475

For Sidewalks, Sewers and Paving—Reported Hospital Completed in Ninety Days.

After going into executive session for a half hour to consider the ordinances providing for the issuing of bonds for certain street improvements, the city council returned to open session Monday night and adopted the ordinances after they were brought up and read the third time One ordinance provides for the issuance of bonds in the sum of $41,281 to pay the corporation's part of the improvements and the other provides for an issue of $98,475 to pay the property owners' portion in anticipation of special assessments

The bond issues are for the purpose of making improvements as follows sidewalks on Cheney avenue, Prospect street, Herman street, Patterson street, Fies avenue, Jackson street and Pennsylvania avenue, sewers on Mark street, Sugar street, Herman street, Owen street and Leader street, paving on north Prospect street, Irey avenue, Delaware avenue, Silver street and Leader street Special assessment ordinances against the properties abutting on the proposed improvements were also adopted.

Provide for Storm-Sewer Vote.

A resolution declaring it necessary to issue bonds in the sum of $525,000 for trunkline storm sewers in the city was also passed This amount being in excess of one-half of one per cent of the total valuation of property listed for taxation, the proposition will have to be submitted to a vote of the people and this will be done at the primary election to be held August 8 The same proposition received a good majority when voted on before, but lost for the reason that a two-thirds vote is required. It is the opinion of officials that the storm sewers can be constructed much cheaper by having them put in at the same time the sanitary sewers are built and it will not necessitate the tearing up of the streets later

An ordinance was adopted regulating the use, construction and maintenance of outside toilets in the city of Marion The ordinance provides that where a property has direct connection with a sanitary sewer the property shall be required to have sewer accommodations for toilets A violation of the offense is made punishable by a fine not to exceed $25 and each day such nuisance exists following the arrest of the party shall constitute an offense. Owing to the warm weather approaching the ordinance was declared an emergency measure to take effect at once The ordinance was passed to conform with a resolution of the board of health to abate nuisances of this kind.

A resolution was adopted granting E F Patten the right to construct wagon and truck scales in front of his property on Erie street

Ask Walk on Dennison Avenue.

Some residents of the northwest part of the city asked that a walk be constructed on Dennison avenue from Thompson street to Lee street for the benefit of residents of Thompson street and the territory east to reach the Lee Street Presbyterian church and mission They were instructed to get up a petition One of the property owners on the street remonstrated and said the lots would hardly bear the expense and that the owners of the property were opposed to the improvement. He was instructed to present a remonstrance

A financial report of the library trustees for the months of January, February and March were presented and read, but no action was taken on the same The mayor's report for the month of March showed that he collected $217 in fines in municipal cases and $38 in licenses

Reports on Hospital Work.

Mayor George W Neely reported to council relative to the slow progress made in repairing the City hospital The mayor stated that Vernon Redding, the architect had met with the hospital commissioners and gave as the reason that materials for some of the improvements were of a special nature and that there was some delay in receiving them and consequently the general contractor was held back. The mayor stated that the elevator has arrived and could be installed within ten days and that the work was now going along in nice shape and would be completed in about ninety days A letter from the architect made practically the same explanation as given by the mayor

A petition for a four-foot sandstone sidewalk on south Seffner avenue in front of lots Nos 4130, 4131 and 4132 was referred to the street and alley committee.

Dr L L Roebuck returned this morning from Rochester and Minneapolis, where he has been the past ten days in attendance at the sixth annual clinical session of the American Congress of Internal Medicine.

This Is Curtain Month

—let us introduce you to a better way of having curtains laundered

All over the United States this is Curtain Month—women everywhere are being urged to brighten up their windows.

Send us your curtains, we will wash them softly in clean, clear water and mild, pure soap—and then finish them to measure. We measure every curtain before it is washed, and then dry it exactly to its original size without the use of a single hook or pin. Edges and scallops are true and even.

Have us relieve you of all the trouble of handling curtains the old way. Just phone us and we will call.

CHAPTER ONE

Street of Strange Faces.

I. THE DARK CORNER.

... way of the thing was ever the ... it befell without warning; or ... the girl had never learned to ... of signs which seemed plain ... in retrospect, when she sat ... and puzzled her pretty head ... the dark riddle of this shadow ... that set her so widely apart from ... girl she knew and, indeed, from the rest of humankind. . . .

... had a day of restlessness, ... every hour brewed its new perverse mood, whose every mood was ... restless, with times of almost ... gayety, causeless, fitful, fugitive ... other times when for no reason ... her knowledge she caught herself sighing long fluttering sighs that ... her strangely. So might one's ... sigh in weariness, faint with ... burden of incessant strife with ... great antagonist of unguessable ...

... toward nightfall all these were ... away into a feeling of serene ... and self-possession; and sat... with consciousness of the rich, ... wine of vitality that quickened ... she thought of life in the likeness ... a wide placid river, wherein she ... like a fearless swimmer—a ... whose waters were warm, ... and calm with a penetrating ... of delicious calm she never ... could be disturbed, so absolute it seemed, so permanent, so imperturbable.

Only the sighs persisted oddly, as ... her spirit knew moments of melancholy of which her mind knew nothing.

And insidiously the tranquil surface ... that contentment was flawed by apprehensions of nameless danger, of ... latent, stealthy and implacable; as though the swimmer surmised some monstrous shape of evil skulking unseen in those opaque deeps—or felt herself subtly ensnared by a current whose irresistible set was altogether toward destruction.

Now at length perceiving what was to come, panic paralyzed in her the instinct of self-preservation: though terror brimmed the cup of being, she made no effort to fight free but, as one who knows that struggling must prove vain, resigned herself and let the baneful current work its will with her. Fascination, too, was at work, deep within her a mad desire to go again that wild way she had so often gone, and once more be, and do, and see. . . .

So it is, so it must be, with those to whom a drug has made itself a thing of Life and Death.

On ahead, like a bend in the river, waited that turning in her psychic life which she knew as the Dark Corner: while she lay passive in the grasp of that power which so obscurely had its rise in her yet was repugnant to her, being at once her Will and her Necessity. And as the Dark Corner drew momentarily more near, the transition which she termed the Change was effected by what may only be described as a convulsion of her very soul, after which came lassitude, a vast enervation in which all lingering traces of reluctance were obliterated.

Now she was no longer herself, but another woman than the one she knew, a strange woman clothed in her own flesh but in no other way akin to her Self of everyday, having no thought, impulse or emotion with which that Self could sympathize, save such as may be considered common to all her sex. Yet, incomprehensibly, consciousness of the old self-identity survived; and though (as she conceived it) dispossessed from its tenement, her Self continued by her body's side, observant, critical, intrigued, something amused. . . .

In this wise rounding the Dark Corner, she passed into that place which she had named the Street of Strange Faces; and the enigma of this confusion of Self with non-Self was forgotten in the rush of exotic sensation and emotion, excitement and lawlessness, which invariably accompanied ... and final commitment to renewed pursuit of these transcendental ... pleasures.

II. LEONORA.

Together with the Faces, its windows made the Street, being of many kinds, to each its own significant illumination: hard plate glass masks of saloons leaering false fellowship, ... shop fronts of ingratiating ... windows of homely golden glow, others through whose latticed shutters filtered sinister gleams bespeaking the unspeakable, others again that gave only dull reflections in begrimed panes of naphtha flames flaring luridly above pushcarts arrayed in unbroken lines along the curbs.

Through this welter of light and shadow, in the sidewalk channels, the Faces passed and repassed, lurking ... in ... doorways, seeking ... the brightest glare, coming and going without rest, in uncouth carnival: kind and brutal, cunning and naive, wicked and innocent, ... fair, unique, commonplace; ... that ... distorted, faces that all... faces that meant nothing, that were mere empty mouthing masks; faces of oriental cast, yellow and red and brown; negro faces in every shade of quartering. . . .

She knew them all: they all knew her. The sense of strangeness ebbed; with every step, with every look around, with every breath she drew, she was losing touch with her other Self which had so singularly renounced its authority and faded into impotence at the Dark Corner, but which still kept step with her, clung to her more closely than her shadow, and like a wraith of the living, watched, noted and compared while taking part in actions wholly foreign to its nature and experiencing reactions obscure to it and unintelligible.

Now the girl moved swiftly, with ease and boldness, even with a hint of arrogance: giving the Faces look for look, smile for smile, frown for frown; laughing impishly up at a tall policeman who knitted black brows over indulgent blue eyes; flinging racy retorts to the banter of a knot of men emerging from a gin-mill; chilling with glance and word the advances of those who should have known better; chaffing hucksters who bawled in her ears the tawdry virtues of their wares; pausing now and again to exchange more kindly persiflage with folk who held title to her liking; cutting an impudent figure, as confident and unabashed as a colt turned loose in home pastures.

Her sharp perceptions took in everything; not one considerable detail escaped their remark. And she liked it, she liked it all, she was curiously permeated to her very marrow with delight in sounds and sights and smells familiar to her senses since time beyond their earliest record.

The Street, never wide, was the narrower for its double rank of pushcarts. Between these an occasional automobile or horse-drawn vehicle went gingerly to spare the multitude of urchins, half dressed and less than half washed, of every age and almost every nationality, that swarmed upon the asphaltum. Tenement houses—their fire escapes converted into balconies lavishly draped with candid bedding and still more candid women—drew confidential heads together on high, leaving visible only a slender ribbon of cobalt sky. In between the air was sluggish, thick with unnatural haze, and rank with many odors; an unholy alliance of garlic, fried fish, boiled cabbage and stale beer maintaining debatable ascendency over the native aroma of a stratum of society which holds soap less necessity than luxury. And the night was tumultuous with screams of children at crude play, howls of babies wallowing in neglect, bawling of street vendors, each striving to outyell his nearest competitor, clatter of tinny pianos, blare and whine of jaded phonographs; all relieved against a wholly normal undertone of incessant gossip and bickering.

The girl hugged to herself the joy of living; this was to her the breath of life; even more, it was enterprise, adventure, the very stuff of Romance.

She went her way smiling, with a conscious smile bred of knowledge that she was dressed in her best, in her very newest best at that, garments of a cut and cost and quality such as the Street seldom saw.

Nevertheless, her show of nonchalance cloaked circumspection; if her looks were free and roving, they were likewise keen and watchful. Though the width of the Street was between them, she was well aware of two plain-clothes men who turned to stare when she had gone by and conferred together concerning her craftily, after the absurd manner of their kind, out of the corners of their mouths.

But that was a minor circumstance, more fun than reason for worry. They couldn't jug a girl for wearing good clothes, even if they didn't know where she had got them or how. . . .

The stress of her attention was due to considerations far more weighty; and when, of a sudden, at a crossing, she descried its cause, she checked in unfeigned dismay, with startled pulses.

III. THE MAN MARIO.

On the far corner a tall man, simply clothed, composed of habit, stood stirless, hands clasped lightly before him in a gesture with which the girl was well acquainted, head and shoulders lifting above the crowd. Against the tawny flames of naphtha torches his profile was sharp and black, the silhouette of an ascetic, gravely fine; but none better than she knew how its austerity was belied by haunted eyes whose sincerity could wring truth from lips that moved to frame a lie.

And he was looking for her; she knew that, too.

In a flurry so real that it touched her anger, she swung aside into the by-street, a grim street that led anywhere but the way she wished to go. Yet she welcomed its sullen gloom and went swiftly, heedless of everything but the necessity of escaping, knowing in her heart she could not escape. . . .

Her name was called in a voice of resonant timbre: "Leonora! I beg of you . . . It is I, Mario!"

She stopped and swung round with a specious show of surprise subsiding into indifference. Tone and manner were discouraging; but her heart was faint

"Oh! hello! It's you . . ."

The man paused, hat in hand, his attitude one of pleading and reproach, yet informed with an ineffaceable dignity.

"You saw me, Leonora. Why did you run—from me?"

She tossed her head. "What makes you think I did?"

"I do not think; I know. You turned up this street to avoid me. Leonora, why?"

"If you thought that—that I wanted to be left alone—why'd you follow me?"

The man lifted his hands palms uppermost, and let them fall.

"You know . . . I love you. I make no secret of that. I have told you—how many times?—a hundred? Yes"—his enunciation grew more rapid—"and you are not indifferent to me. You never said so, but . . . I know."

"Oh, I like you all right—"

"No; more than that; too much to wish to hurt me. Is it not so?"

"Why, I don't want to hurt you, of course. But—if you've got to know—I was in a hurry. I've got a date—and I'm late."

"And I am detaining you! Forgive me—but let me go with you a little way."

The girl shot hunted glances right and left; then, since nothing in sight promised diversion, said ungraciously: "Nobody can stop your walking with me."

"Nobody but you, Leonora. One word—"

"One word from me and you'll do exactly as you please." With a nervous laugh—"Oh, come along!"—she turned back, walking hastily, the man Mario falling in at her side. "I'd just as leave you didn't come all the way, though."

"You do not wish me to know where you go." He nodded sober confirmation of an unuttered guess. "I see . . ."

"You see a terrible lot!" The girl had a spasm of irritation. "You're always seeing things. Well, what do you see now?"

"You go to meet those others"—his tone was sad—"those whom I have so often begged you—"

"Guess it's my business who my friends are."

"Certainly you give me no right to make it mine. That cannot affect the truth that such associations are unwise."

"Maybe I'm best judge of that, too."

"Leonora; why pretend to me? Deceive yourself if you must and can—but not me, not one who loves you as I do. Do not attempt it, even. It is so useless."

With a courtesy the more gratifying because it was so novel, Mario put his hand under her arm, lightly piloting her through the human mazes of the brawling Street, which they crossed squarely and quickly left behind.

After a little while, being in the wrong, she said sulkily: "I don't see why you're always making out I'm trying to put something over on you. I never promised . . ."

"True. But you know what these friends of yours are, and their ways, whither they lead, their inevitable end. You know, if you persist, your fate must be as theirs."

"I guess what's good enough for my friends is good enough for me—"

"No, Leonora; you are too good for that—or I could not love you."

The man paused, and his hold on her arm drew the girl to an unwilling pause with him, midway down a dark, dead block of industrial buildings, with a windowless wall beside them and not a soul nearby to hear. The girl was distressed, more than a little humbled in her own esteem by this revelation of an affection more enduring and generous and frank than any she had ever known.

"I am not a common man." Mario was stating simple fact, innocent of conceit. "I know the world outside the one you know, and the men and women who live in it. Where I go, I look about me, and reflect on what I see. I am seldom mistaken in those who interest me. And you whom I love . . . I tell you, you are no more of this life than I, and you do a wrong thing, a wicked and cruel thing, when you trample down that which is good in you and might bring you to a splendid destiny."

Impressed in spite of herself, touched, and flattered, too, she looked uneasily away, twisting her hands together, her tongue faltering.

"I suppose you know what you mean . . ."

"And you also. I mean, you could love me if you would, and in my love, in the life I offer you, become the self that today you hide away so jealously, your real self, a woman fine and strong and true, not this adventure-loving companion of rogues and vagabonds—and worse!" He gave an imploring gesture. "Ah, Leonora, if only you would give them up!"

She looked up with wistful eyes, all effrontery abandoned, only the woman remaining, the woman whom this man alone had the secret of perceiving in her. In this, indeed, resided the true reason for her fear of meeting Mario: he was disastrous to her peace of mind, her self-complacence; when she listened to him, satisfaction departed and in its stead came inquietude, with the wish to be what he would have her to be, what intuition told her she could be if she would but set herself to overcome her own resistance.

She searched his face in wonder. When he disturbed her so profoundly, why did she like him so much? What was it that gave him power to charm her wits away, discontent her with all that had otherwise seemed excellent and complete, make nothing of the steel of her set purpose? Was it his love alone?

He loved her, she was satisfied of that, but with such forbearance, such consideration, tenderness and understanding as left her incredulous. In the Street love was another thing entirely, a fiercer, cruder business, brusque and selfish without disguise—something open, direct and casual, but as essential as meat and drink. But this was different, this love Mario had for her.

Yes; and it was true, what he asserted, he too was different; there was no one like him, so gentle and strong and brave, fastidious, reserved, and thoughtful. In her world he made a figure striking and incongruous. Yet he lingered on obstinately, in part (he told her) because it was his passion to study every side of life, but mostly because he loved her and never would willingly give up hope of winning her. He would never leave, he protested, till she went with him.

"Leonora!" he pleaded. "Come with me . . ."

In a moment of determination she tried to put sentiment aside with a hard little laugh of scorn. "I guess you don't understand: Red would kill me if I chucked him!"

"He would never find you where I would take you, to my home in Spain; or if he ever did, he would not dare lift eyes to you, or know in you, a lady, moving in the world for which she was born, the girl he knew as Leonora and loved—after his fashion—with whatever feeling it is he calls love! Come with me, Leonora, and be your true self. Life can be beautiful . . ."

He played shrewdly on her most secret weakness: she was fond of believing herself somewhat better than her milieu, through some romantic accident superior in point of birth as well as, what was undeniable, in spirit and intelligence. Vistas of powerful seduction opened to her contemplation. At heart an arrant egoist, she saw herself primitively as she had seen other women, in her excursions into the haunts of the well-to-do, radiantly begowned and furred and jeweled, lolling insolently in a limousine car, Mario at her side "dressed like a gentleman" . . .

But this vision was swiftly dissipated by recrudescence of that fear which Red inspired, in honest conviction that no earthly power could save her from his vengeance.

"You don't know Red." She shook her head solemnly in a spirit of fatal prophecy. "He'd croak you, too; he'd croak us both."

Mario smiled faintly. "I am not afraid—"

"You're not afraid of dying?"

"What is life without your love?" He had a thoughtful moment. "Who knows but death may prove infinitely more wonderful than this life of ours? There is but one way of finding out . . ."

She heard him in a stare. The woman in her could hardly be unaffected by the handsome gravity of that extraordinary countenance, whose salient features gained so much through that Rembrandtesque play of deep shadows and dull light. Under the spell of his mentality she acknowledged now for the first time that he was essential; all else was nothing. And of a sudden care fastened cruel claws upon her heart and wrung from it a cry of self-betrayal.

"Maybe you're not afraid, Mario. I don't believe you are. But I am—afraid for you. I wish you'd go away."

"You love me!" Her hands lifted in protest; he caught and inclosed them both in his own. His shadowed face and eyes grew luminous, his sonorous accents vibrated with emotion. "You love me, Leonora—at last."

He was drawing her steadily toward him, all her strength seemed to have ebbed from her limbs. There was madness in the beating of her heart, madness mounting like mist into her brain. Now she was in his arms, and glad. His lips closed on hers. For a long breath she was a mere thing of reeling senses.

"You love me?"

"I don't know," she murmured—"maybe . . ."

"Tomorrow you will marry me, and we will go away—"

Stung by realization of what had happened, she struggled to be free.

"I don't know—perhaps—yes, I will. But not tomorrow—not right away."

"Why—?"

"Let me go—I'll tell you." He released her. She stepped back, shaken with love and fright, looking fearfully up and down the st...

"I can't marry you just yet. I've got to break with Red so's he won't know it wasn't him that broke with me. And I've got other things to do—things I can't tell you about, Mario—things I've got to 'tend to before I can marry you. But you can trust me: I've promised, and I will, as soon as ever I can . . ." Her voice quavered, and she thrust out her hands, fending off his arms. "Please don't kiss me again, please let me go now. If anybody saw us and told Red . . ."

He made a sign of submission. "As you will, so be it, Leonora. I will see you again—when?"

"Tomorrow. I'll give you a ring about noon and fix to meet you—uptown somewheres, I guess. Now—I've got to run. Good-night . . . dear."

He uttered in resignation: "Good-night." With a flickering smile of fondness she turned and left him, her slight young figure flitting swiftly through the shadows. Beneath the lamp at the far street corner, she turned, looked back, saw him motionless where she had left him, surmised his look of longing and, waving a hand, ran on, wild joy in her heart contending with cold fear.

For now she had done it, and there'd be the devil to pay. But it couldn't be helped. Though hell and heaven were leagued against them, she would go through. She always did, once she got started. And with Mario, she knew, it was as with her; he too would go through, now he knew she loved him, though Red and all the world besides should try to stop him . . .

At length, well out of her course, she stopped, imposed coherence upon her thoughts, got her bearings, and started on anew, in a cooling mood constraining herself to forget Mario and concentrate upon the business that waited for her at her destination.

But the Self outside herself, of whose constant company she was wholly ignorant, never ceased to yearn back toward that gallant, lonely figure they two had left behind in the quiet by-street.

GARIS' BEDTIME STORIES

UNCLE WIGGILY AND TOODLE'S PIES.

[BY HOWARD R. GARIS.]

[Copyright 1922, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.]

"Well, what in the world are you going to do now, Uncle Wiggily?" asked Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy one morning, as she saw the bunny rabbit gentleman, with his oldest clothes on, walking around in the yard of his hollow stump bungalow.

"I'm going to build a little store house, of stones, in which to keep my cabbages, lettuce and turnips nice and cool this summer," answered Mr. Longears, as he began gathering a pile of stones from different parts of the yard. "It will be a sort of outside, extra cellar, on top of the ground, Nurse Jane. A little house of stone in which I can put my lettuce as I bring it from the garden."

"Then it will always be fresh and crisp," said the muskrat lady housekeeper.

"That is the idea," answered Uncle Wiggily. "I suppose you thought I was going to play ball when you saw me with my old clothes on?" he asked Nurse Jane.

"That or tag," she replied with a laugh. "Do you need to wear such old things?" she asked.

"It is better," Uncle Wiggily said. "I have to carry many stones and pile them one on top of the other, as children make houses of their building blocks. And some of the stones will be heavy. That's why I put on these old garments."

"And very sensible I call it," remarked Nurse Jane. "Well, I must get at my work. Good luck to you, Uncle Wiggily."

"Thank you," said the rabbit gentleman, and he set to work. He piled stones upon stones, making a little house such as you may often have built of your blocks. But the trouble was that the stones were rough and uneven, and when more than two or three were piled one on the other, down they toppled again. Once they pinched Uncle Wiggily's paws.

"Dear me! This is never going to work, I'm afraid!" said the bunny gentleman, as the stones of his little vegetable house toppled down again. "I wonder how I can make them stick together?"

"With mud pies!" suddenly answered a voice near the duck pond. At first Uncle Wiggily thought it might be the Skillery Scallery Alligator, but when he looked a second time he saw that it was Toodle Flat Tail, the beaver boy.

"What did you tell me to do, Toodle?" asked the bunny.

"I said stick the stones together with mud pies," answered the beaver boy.

"You know when real people build real stone or brick houses the mason sticks them together with mortar. We beavers are masons, in a way, for we plaster our houses with mud mortar. So that's why I said stick those stones together with mud pies."

"How do you do it?" asked Uncle Wiggily, for he was tired of piling the dry stones up and having them topple down.

"I'll show you," said Toodle. So on his flat tail, which was like the trowel of a mason, he carried some mud from the duck pond to where Uncle Wiggily had piled the stones. Beavers don't often carry mud on their tails, even though some people have this idea. Ordinarily, a beaver carries mud in his front paws, holding them close to his body, as he walks on his hind legs. And he doesn't use his tail to plaster mud over his stick house, either. Instead, he uses his paws for this. The flat tail of the beaver is for swimming, and also to whack on the ground or water to give the signal of danger.

But, just for fun, Toodle carried some mud on his flat tail, and then the beaver boy showed Uncle Wiggily how to smear the sticky mud on a stone, and put that stone on top of another. And the "mud pies," as Toodle had called them, held the stones together so they did not topple over.

"Now I can build my little stone house in which to store my lettuces," said Uncle Wiggily. "Thank you so much, Toodle."

"Oh, I'm glad I can help you," spoke the beaver boy. Then he brought up more mud from the pond on his tail and in his paws, and helped the bunny gentleman plaster together the little stone house.

When it was almost finished, all of a sudden, the Woozie Wolf stuck his head out of the bushes, gave a ... and cried:

"I'm going to nibble Uncle Wiggily's ears."

"Oh, are you? Well, try the taste of this first!" shouted Toodle. With that the beaver boy took some mud on his flat tail and sent it sailing through the air, straight into the open mouth of the wolf.

"Oh, blah! Blah! Blah!" spluttered the bad chap, and then he had to run away to wash the mud pies off his tongue, so he didn't bite the bunny after all, and soon the stone house was finished.

Don't Spoil Your Child's Hair by Washing It

When you wash your hair, be careful what you use. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water is all that is required. Simply moisten the hair with water, and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last everyone in the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.—Adv.

S. S. S. Fills Out Hollow Cheeks, Thin Limbs!

Men and women,—whether you will ever build yourself up to your normal, just-right weight depends on the number of blood-cells in your blood. That's all there is to it. It's a scientific fact. If your blood-cell factory isn't working right, you will be run-down, thin, your blood will be in disorder, and perhaps your face will be broken out with pimples, blackheads and eruptions. S. S. S. keeps your blood-cell factory working full time. It helps build new blood-cells. That's why S. S. S. builds up thin, run-down people, it puts firm flesh on your bones, it rounds out your face, arms, neck, limbs, the whole body. It puts the "pink" in your cheeks. It takes the hollowness from the eyes, and it fools Father Time by smoothing out wrinkles in men and women by "plumping" them up. S. S. S. is a remarkable blood-purifier. While you are getting plump, your skin eruptions, pimples, blackheads, acne, rheumatism, rash, tetter, blotches are being removed. The medicinal ingredients of S. S. S. are guaranteed purely vegetable. S. S. S. is sold at all drug stores, in two sizes. The larger size is the more economical.
